

- Flickr (2.5)

I experienced noticeable issues from the beginning as the login process was not going smoothly. It took a very long time to process that and also like most apps do now to sign up directly using google account, it didn't have that facility. Photo uploads were slower than expected, and the app occasionally lagged while browsing images. The interface is not very user friendly and the UI/UX is not very appealing.

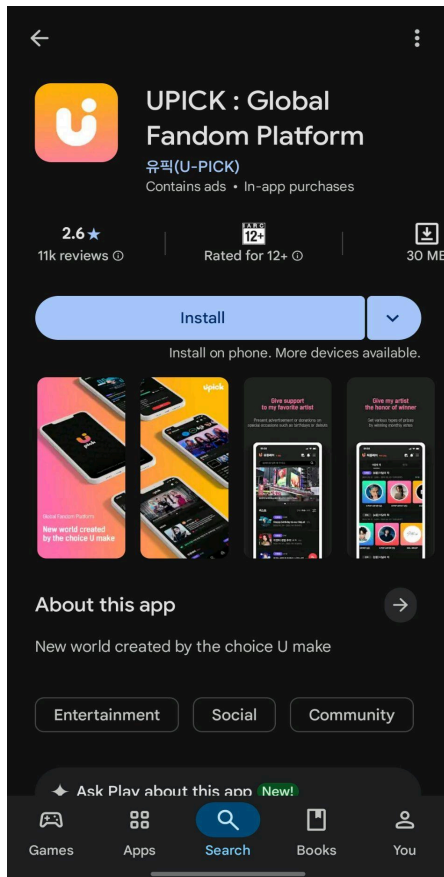

- HONOR Health (2.8)

I tried connecting it with a compatible wearable device. The pairing process took multiple attempts, and synchronization of health data such as step count and sleep tracking were inconsistent. The app took a long time to update the data and the dashboard was also lagging.

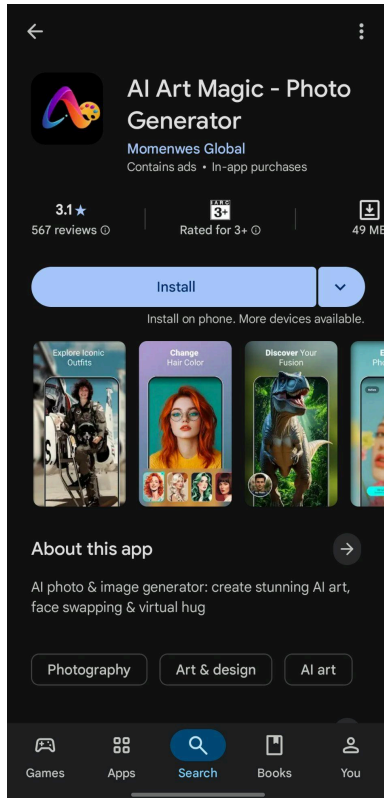

- UPICK (2.6)
I faced login verification delays and app lag. Navigation between different sections was not very smooth, and some pages loaded slowly. The user interface was a bit too complex to understand how to work with it smoothly.

- AI Art Magic (3.1)

The app didn't work as smoothly as I expected. While it claimed to generate AI art, most of my time was spent watching ads which made the experience feel slow and annoying. When I tried to generate images, the results were often low quality or not what I asked for.

- Roojh (2.3)
The sign up process was slow, and OTP verification took multiple attempts. The app lagged while navigating between sections, and uploading medical documents was not smooth. At times, the app became unresponsive. The interface also felt slightly confusing and not very user-friendly.
